Needs to have a controller smoothing option so you can actually click on things.. Dosen't exactly offer very much in the way of features for the price.. Virtual Desktop just puts your normal non-vr screens into VR, not much else. It has a few sliders and some backgrounds for the unused space. If it was a free program, then it would be a great tool to have on your pc, but 10 bucks to just have my non-vr screens in my Vive at a much lower resolution? I'm gonna pass on that. If you want to know how the experience is like on Vive, try using the SteamVR "Desktop" tab. Its basically that, but a bit more refined with multiple monitor functionality and adds some curves the windows so that text is easier to read.

Its a basic tool that can be easily substituted by SteamVR's built in functionality. Not worth the money unless you want to live inside of VR in some kind of year 2077 dystopia.

. This is the best software for VR desktop browsing, but it does not mean it is any good. I hope a new developer would make a decent one
